

Niagara County Historian's Office

The Niagara County Historian's Office is part of New York State's network of officially appointed local government historians. The purpose of this office is to be a resource in the community, to research and write on the county's history, and to help interpret community history by assisting teachers, schools, and civic organizations.

What Can the Historian's Office Do For You?

Organize and deliver public programs, assist in commemorative events, promote county heritage tourism, and advocate for the historic preservation of private and public buildings, and safeguard the documents and records of Niagara County's history.

The Historian's Office can assist visitors in a number of different ways: by locating numerous documents, accessing computer databases, and explaining the use of various public records and where to find them, either in this office or at other locations.

Below are documents and materials that are available for public use at the Niagara County Historian's Office.

Mission of the Historian's Office

State law requires that each county establish a County Historian's office for the purpose of preserving that county's history. Niagara County was founded in 1808, and the Historian's Office was created in 1951.

The work of a County Historian consists of four areas:

Research and Writing

Historians write for scholarly publications as well as magazines and newspapers. Interpreting the past is their primary responsibility.

Teaching and Presenting to the Public

Historians present courses in local and regional history and serve as a resource to teachers in their local history curriculums. They serve as consultants to any historical agency, society, individual, student, or exhibit planner. Historians are called upon to speak or lecture to the community and to appear on television and radio programs. They advise legislators and other public officials on historical matters.

Historic Preservation

Historians advocate not only for the preservation of sites of architectural significance, but also for the written manuscripts and public records that document a community's past, plus the objects and artifacts that constitute a community's material culture. They are a resource to authorities on questions relating to the identification of historic structures and districts, and prepare nominations to the State and National Registers of Historic Places. They also develop and manage historical marker programs.

The Historian's Office preserves public records in order to guarantee that this information remains public. If such documents as naturalization and marriage records, legislative journals, census and others are entrusted into the care of private enterprises such as a local historical society, it cannot be ensured that such information will remain accessible at all times to everyone seeking it.

Organization, Advocacy, & Tourism Promotion

Historians organize and direct the commemoration of historical anniversaries, and participate in other civic or patriotic observations. They assist in fund raisers or grant writing, and provide resource material for historical programs. As Heritage Tourism is one of the fastest growing segments of the tourism industry, county historians support the local and regional tourism agencies in an accurate and attractive presentation of the area's history.
